Lessons As the title suggests, an Indian-American filmmaker moves to Las Vegas, but when the box office bomb he's hoping for doesn't come he decides to make his own movie. This film is set in Vegas around the time Hollywood stars started visiting in order to boost their careers. The movie explores what life was like for Indians there during that period - it depicts their lives before they become famous and then after they've achieved fame. The film also shows us the relationship between two women who are mistaken as sisters but are really mother and daughter. This is a documentary about how important it is to stay true to yourself even if you fail at times. An Indian-American woman is faced with the dilemma of whether she should marry the man her family has chosen for her or chase her dreams of being an actress. She must decide if she wants to be true to herself or to the rest of the society around her. This film exemplifies how much it means in India to find one's true self and follow it, even when it's hard. This film depicts the lives of two brothers (Shah Rukh Khan and Saif Ali Khan) who are both successful in their careers but kind of struggling when it comes to finding love. One brother is married while another is divorced, but still hasn't found anyone else after his wife's divorce papers are signed. The brother who is married (Amitabh Bachchan) then falls for an actress (Aishwarya Rai). Eventually, he ends up leaving his wife and really gets into the movie business. The other brother (Saif Ali Khan) is still searching for someone to settle down with and tries to fall in love with a woman (Kajol).
